WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

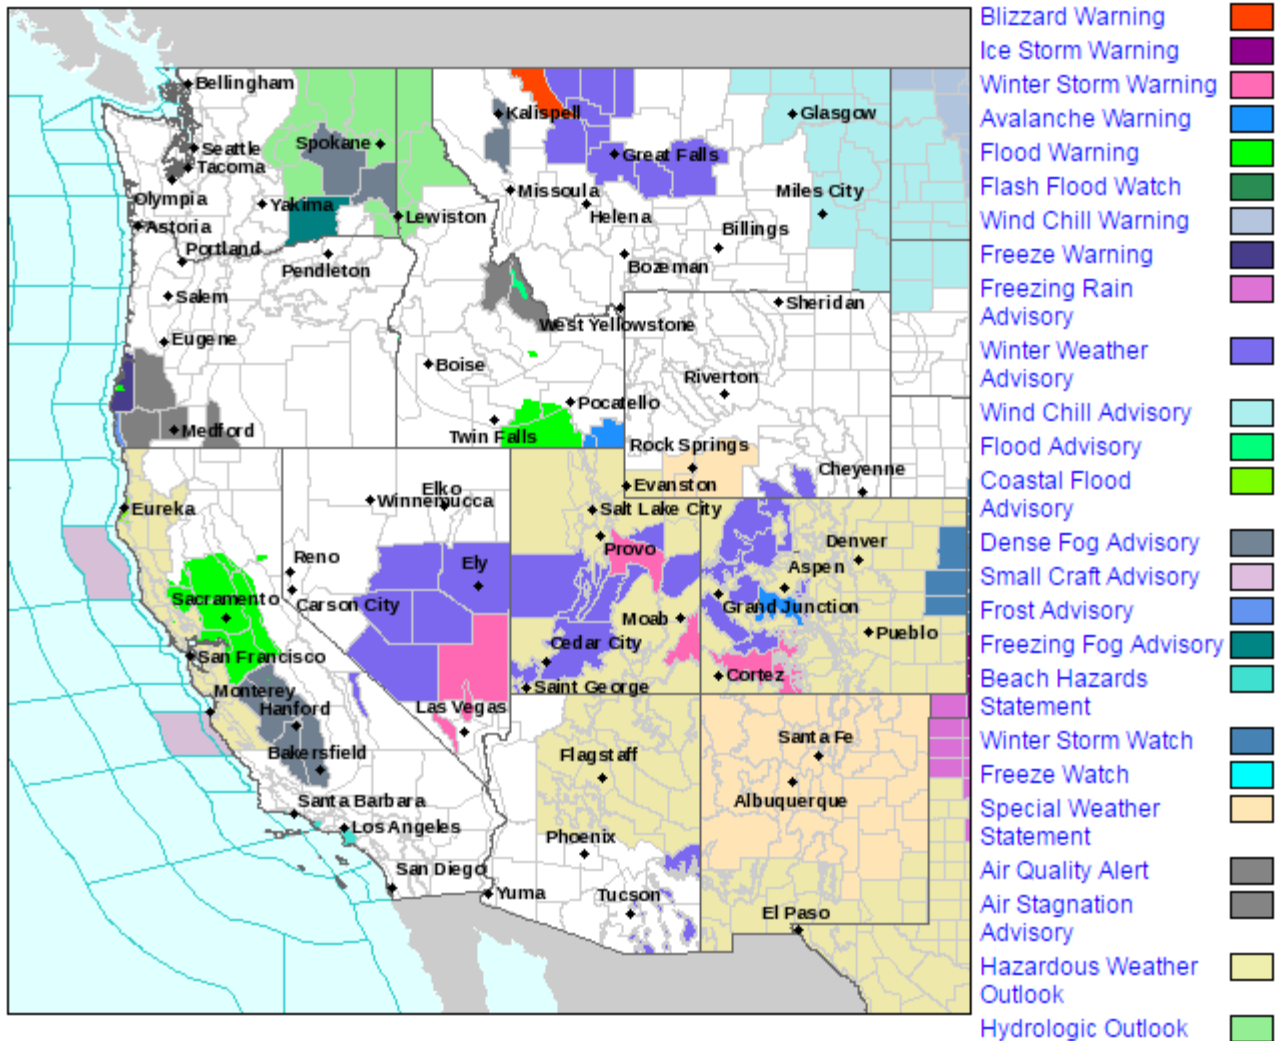

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

Rain and mountain snow will mainly fall from Lake and Plumas Counties south today, with snow levels around 3000 feet. Isolated showers are possible in the mountains farther north today. Dry weather is expected through Monday as high pressure moves over the region. North to Northeast surface winds in the northern Sacramento Valley and nearby foothills will produce clear, dry, and warmer conditions, while the southern Sacramento Valley and many other basins and canyons will have dense fog develop. In some locations the dense fog will persist around the clock. On Tuesday the first of the next series of wet Pacific storm systems will reach the coast with light to moderate rain and gusty Southeast to Southwest. Snow levels will be 5000-7000 feet Tuesday night and Wednesday as heavier precipitation spreads inland. Snow levels will fall by 2000 feet or so on Thursday as colder air moves in. Wet unsettled weather is expected to continue for several days beyond that.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Showers will end across Central California by early this morning, but continue across Southern California through this evening. Most locations including the deserts will receive between a half inch and 2 inches of rainfall with this storm. The snow level will be around 4,000 feet. South to west winds of 20 to 30 mph with gusts to 50 mph will surface across the wind prone mountain and desert areas through this afternoon. Maximum temperatures will be around 10 degrees below normal through today, with 30s to low 40s across the mountains and upper 40s and 50s in the valleys. A slow warming and drying trend will take place Saturday through early next week as a ridge of high pressure builds into California from the Pacific Ocean. Temperatures will be near normal early next week. North to northeast winds of 20 to 30 mph with gusts to 50 mph will surface across the mountains and below the canyons and passes of Southern California Friday evening through Saturday afternoon. Another series of Pacific storms look to move into Central and Southern California starting Wednesday with periods of heavy rain, strong south to west winds, and below normal temperatures.
